Education/knowledge can never be taken away from me. Obtaining a post-secondary education is essential in ensuring a promising future. Education is a pathway for success. College will allow me to be able to gain the skills needed to reach my goals and enter the job force.

My life began with me being diagnosed with Autism at the age of three. I could not speak until the age of 6. With several years of Special Education, Speech Therapy, and hard work, I am now an honor roll student, musician, singer and college bound. Unfortunately, during my journey, I faced bullying because I am "different" which caused me great stress. Looking for a way to deal with this stress, I found something that I truly love.

I learned at an early age to embrace something that I am passionate about. My passion is the arts. That encompasses photography, music and theatre. I am taking all my passions to Grambling State University this fall to major in Theatre. I will use theatre as a forum of expression and understanding. I want to use my "voice" as a vehicle to show others that there is nothing wrong with being unique and a true authentic person.

While earning a degree in college is important, it is even more important to grow as an individual. Having the ability to be in the presence of like-minded individuals striving towards the same goal will push me towards greatness. I look forward to every adventure that my post-secondary education has to offer.

I see many things in my neighborhood that I wish I could change. I live in Englewood, zip code 60621. I've heard that my neighborhood is one of the most dangerous neighborhoods in the country. We are good decent people but we need investment and education.

Although I'm from a single- parent household, I've been fortunate enough to have a loving extended family who took me outside of the neighborhood for more educational experiences/opportunities. I would like to do the same for others after college. Thinking back on my school experience, I didn't have many adults I could relate to. However, the one teacher that has had a profound impact on my life is Mr. Brown. He is a Dean and a teacher. He's taught me and counseled me when I really needed guidance. His influence and encouragement has helped me decide to major in education. It is one way I feel I can make a direct impact on my community. I would like to use my life experience and incorporate it in classroom lessons when needed.

I hope to be a "Mr. Brown" for black young males. I plan to come back to teach in my neighborhood of Englewood. Black male teachers only make up 2% of the teacher population. I will major in Education and become a teacher to close this lagging percentage gap. This is where I am most needed.

I recently lost one of my closest friends to gun violence. Before his death, I was debating whether I would go to college or begin a job at Amazon. After his death, I know I need space and time to continue my education so that I improve myself but also improve my community. I love my neighborhood of Englewood. Even with its issues, the neighborhood is filled with beautiful people who want better. Deandre's death made me focus on what's important. I no longer just think about what I am going to do today, but rather what I do today will affect my tomorrow.

I grew up in a single-parent household being the oldest out of five children. I was practically the second mom in the house by age 13 and my mom dropped out of high school when she was pregnant with me, which automatically placed a weight on me. Being older had already placed this weight on my shoulders to be a role model for younger siblings along with being expected to get good grades. I made it my goal to do better. I'll be a first-generation college student on both my mom's and dad's side so it pushes me to make my family proud. I knew from personal experience that a college education can take you far in life, only a high school diploma can do so much. I wanted to be financially stable and never have to worry about money or my living situation.

Going to college also aligns with my interest in meeting new people! Though I've connected with people online who were miles away, college would be my chance to physically connect with these people. Colleges with large environments give me the chance to be able to meet all kinds of people. Being around children for the majority of my life has also inspired me to want to work with children. I want to mix both of my passions by inspiring kids to go out and explore, to find themselves no matter their circumstances. My goal is to become a pediatric surgeon, so I want to go to a college connected to a hospital. Life hasn't always been the easiest for me but my experiences help me grow and through this growth, I'm sure I will be successful.

Growing up, I thought I was supposed to be the next big drug dealer because of the environment I was in. After all, how can you blame me when it's all I knew? All that I saw? No one ever taught me anything other than the streets so, I knew that was my path. As the years went on, I lost a lot of childhood friends to gun violence, drugs, and the system. After a while, I felt like I had nothing to live for and subsequently, I continued on the same path.

I would risk my life every time I walked out of the door and I was just so lost that I felt like no one loved or cared about me. That it wouldn't make a difference if I was gone. Well, that was until the day that I almost lost my life. Although I've been shot at many times before, this time was different. This time, it traumatized me and I think I'll be scared for the rest of my life. While in a moving car, I got shot in my back and my friend got shot in his head. As we were laying there, I just kept thinking about how he wouldn't even make it to his 8th grade graduation. I was then taken to the hospital and while being in a coma, I came to understand what I needed to do. I woke up as a different person.

Being able to graduate high school and go on to college was something I took for granted. Now, it feels like one of the most important things that I'll ever do in my life. I want to be someone who people will look up to. I need to graduate from college not only for myself, but to also encourage young men who were also lost to go to school and become something other than what they've been taught. I want to encourage them to find their purpose in life and know that they can succeed. Nearing my high school graduation, I am so proud of myself. I wasn't supposed to be here.

There are many obstacles I have overcome in my life. The most challenging obstacle I've overcome is when I decided to move out of my mom's house. It really started when mom became pregnant and I had to help a lot more around the house. I was already a teenager, and she had a high-risk pregnancy. I had been responsible for helping out around the house, but now I was responsible for it all: washing dishes, vacuuming, and making sure the house was maintained while she was on bed rest. I thought things would get better once she gave birth to my sister, but things got worse.

Once my sister was born, things drastically changed. School was not an option for me. I couldn't go to class and watch my sister at the same time; not even online during remote learning. All at once, my responsibilities overwhelmed me. I tried solving the problem by getting online for e-learning early, but that never worked. Things became impossible as I became burdened with caring for a family while learning what it was to be a young man. I needed a way out - I'm a problem solver - so I began to visit my father's home. This sometimes worked until my mom went back to work. I was always watching my siblings, including learning how to change multiple diapers at age 15 years old. I could rarely log in to my online classes because I was responsible for the home and my sister while my mother worked.

Summertime came. With my senior year around the corner, everything was looking good. My real escape from being responsible for my baby sister: I was going back to in-person learning!

I knew going back in person would be best for me, my education, and my mental health. However, my mother felt differently. She completely stopped speaking to me. I was shocked. It made me feel down. I felt betrayed and disappointed.

In the end, her silence gave me the motivation to push myself further. I was going to prove to her I could be more than she ever thought or expected of me. My responsibility was no longer for anyone else. I was only responsible for myself. I have focused my energy on bettering myself, taking care of myself, and taking my education seriously. Being young to me has always meant taking care of those around me. Now my responsibility is only to me.

While my mother's pregnancy during the COVID-19 pandemic was an obstacle for me, I knew my way through this generational curse of having to worry about my baby sister was to get back to school. I am determined to find meaning and purpose in my life by bettering myself. I've learned to rise above. I must be responsible for myself first. I plan on attending college and earning a degree in business. I will be the first person in my family to earn a college degree. I will prove to myself and everyone around me that I will continue to overcome obstacles and be successful.

2022 TRUNK SCHOLARSHIPS

HISTORY OF THE TRUNK SCHOLARSHIPS

The Revie Sorey Trunk Scholarships are named in honor of our former Educational Services Director and Chicago Bear who launched the program 14 years ago when he learned that our college-bound students were burdened by the expenses of dorm room and school supplies not covered by grants and scholarships. The Trunk Scholarship program is an important extension of our acclaimed College Preparation & Placement Program that has placed more than 75,000 youth in more than 400 colleges and universities throughout the United States. This includes assisting graduating seniors in securing billions of dollars in financial aid and scholarships over the last six decades, representing $16.8 million in 2021 alone.
